wine industry veterans

Husband and wife team, Walt Averill and Máire Murphy met through the wine industry where until 2011 they had spent their entire careers. While trying to create innovative packaging for their new wine, Rua, they imagined a capsule that was reusable and made from the same material (silicone) used for bungs that seal oak barrels when wine is aged. Thus, the name CapaBunga® – a cap that looks like a bung.

When the first prototype arrived, they realized after using it a few times themselves that every wine drinker had to have at least one! And from there, the business was born; first selling custom brand-ed caps to the wine industry, and then, in January 2012 launching a consumer line featuring catchy slogans and graphics on brightly colored CapaBungas.

The reaction in the marketplace was overwhelming, and suddenly their customers were asking for new products. Given their extensive experience in the wine industry, they knew they had a unique perspective to develop products that eliminated the foibles of previous products. With that in mind, they set out to expand the product line which has now reached into complimentary areas, like their new, award winning Cheese Vault.
